Supreme Court Dockets City Bond Validation

The State Supreme Court has docketed for January 21, 1969, the appeal of the City Council's petition for validation of $780,000 bonds to finance the Bay St. Louis street paving program, according to an announcement this week by Mayor John Scarfone.

"We are confident that the lower court's decision is firm and we will proceed with advertising bids on the street improvement program as soon as a favorable decision is rendered," said Scarfone, noting also that the engineers have submitted all final plans and specifications, so that "we are ready to advertise for bids."

Acknowledging that roads and streets are sometimes going to be rough and hazardous during the present type of weather, the mayor pointed out that everything possible is being done to maintain and keep thoroughfares in passable condition, "But I am appealing to the people to use discretion in driving and realize that these bad conditions do exist, and exercise extreme caution, particularly during the holidays."

The pending appeal is on a ruling by Chancellor William G. Hewes whose denial of the commission council's petition was based largely on technical errors in the minutes of the Commission Council in Resolution and failure to give public notice of change in position of the Council regarding receiving and filing protests after April 20, 1968, for the issuance and sale of the bonds.

A Conservative View

by James J. Kilpatrick

When a conversation works around to the evils of trade unionism among public employees, ordinarily the talk is of tangible evils—of schools closed, trash uncollected, laws ignored. Down in Miami, another evil has appeared. It merits consideration as a portent of things to come in other cities across the country.

Ten months ago, it will be recalled, the Florida Education Association called the first statewide teachers' strike in the nation's history. (Actually, it wasn't called a strike; it was called a mass resignation, which was part of the gross hypocrisy of the whole unhappy affair. It also was said that the walkout was intended to win better schools for the children; the overriding purpose, in point of fact, was to win greater power for the teachers' union.)

Nowhere was the strike more bitterly contested than in Miami. There the Dade Classroom Teachers Association (CTA), largest local of the FEA, led the walkout. Members of the much smaller Dade County Education Association, opposed in principle to a teachers' strike, struggled in concert with outraged parents to keep Miami schools open.

Finally the walkout dragged to an end, and striking members of the CTA returned to their classrooms. The damage that had been done to faculty morale and to parent-teacher relationships was severe, but that is another story. Of more immediate interest is the agreement, or "mutual understanding," just reached between the CTA and the Dade County Board of Public Instruction. It is a lulu.

About 6,300 of Miami's 9,000 teachers belong to the CTA. Under this agreement, the CTA—the union that pulled the February strike—is to have exclusive bargaining powers with the Dade County board. These powers extend not only to wages and working conditions, but to professional matters as well. Only the CTA would have the privilege of payroll deductions. The CTA would name members of the Professional Policies Committee. It would have exclusive privileges of union meetings on school property, days off with pay for teacher conferences, use of the inter-school mails, and even exclusive use of school bulletin boards. In every schoolhouse, the CTA would appoint one teacher as union agent or shop steward, in charge of grievance negotiations. Jimmy Hoffa, the Teamsters' boss, could not have drafted a contract that carries more clout.

Under this agreement, those teachers who resisted last winter's strike are out in the cold. The 1,500-member Dade County Education Association could not so much as post a notice, solicit members on school property, or call a meeting of its own members after school hours. An independent teacher could not even work out a grievance privately with school authorities; a "written copy of the disposition of the grievance" would have to be given to the CTA.

In a scathing editorial two weeks ago, the Miami Herald denounced this agreement as a "sweetheart of a deal." The memorandum of understanding, said the paper, "is nothing more nor less than an exclusive union contract," which is forbidden by State law to employee groups claiming the right to strike.

Jack Gordon, a member of the School Board, defends the memorandum: "It is important for the public to see there are good, efficient, business reasons for making this agreement. We can't deal with people on an individual basis."

And there you have it. That is the direction these things take. Teachers with years of experience in the Miami school, if they oppose the trade union concept, now face a miserable choice of alternatives: They can join the CTA and pay $60 a year in dues to a union they despise, or they can remain aloof and be denied any effective voice in the formation of professional policies. Such dilemmas may be familiar in industrial employment; they are novel, and they are damned ugly, in the classrooms of our public schools.

As this is written, the Dade County Education Association—the non-striking group—has won a court order temporarily suspending application of the most onerous provisions of the new agreement. The Miami School Board will be reconstituted next month with three newly-elected members; conceivably the memorandum may be revised along less oppressive lines. Nevertheless, a heavy-handed precedent has been set in the nation's seventh largest school system. What now distinguishes the teacher from the longshoreman? Anything at all?

FEAR OF PUNISHMENT for bending this truck cab led two youths to drive this Sealtest Milk truck into a borrow pit off Hwy. 90 last Friday. $3,000 in damages were reported to the truck.

Thefts Rise on Holidays

Mississippi Christmas shoppers should beware of auto thieves, who are expected to steal over a million dollars worth of autos and items from cars in the state during the next few weeks, warns the National Automobile Theft Bureau.

Mr. Julian H. Clark, manager of NATB's southern division office in Atlanta, said the estimate is based on experience from December thefts in previous years in Mississippi.

He cautioned that the estimate may be low, since auto thefts increased by 34 per cent during the first six months of this year, compared to the same period in 1967.

During all of 1967, 1,331 autos were stolen in Mississippi.

Mr. Clark said Christmas gifts or a seat of an auto are popular items for thieves to take. He urged shoppers to place their packages in auto trunks.

He said thieves frequently enter autos to take gaily wrapped Christmas packages and end up stealing the entire auto. This leaves the owner with a financial loss and the inconvenience of shopping for more Christmas presents without a car.

Mr. Clark said the best way to avoid having your auto stolen is to keep the car locked and the ignition key in your pocket.

Over 60 per cent of the cars stolen had been left unlocked and over half of these were left with keys in the ignition.

The NATB officials also warned that auto stereo tape players have suddenly become prime targets for thieves, who in turn are selling them to unsuspecting teenagers.

The NATB is supported by some 450 insurance companies for the purpose of assisting law enforcement agencies in recovering stolen autos and breaking up auto theft rings.
